New Tiles Based on David Hicks's Designs

By GISELA WILLIAMS
Published: February 2, 2011

Popham Design, a tile company in Marrakesh, Morocco, has teamed up with the designer Ashley Hicks to produce three new designs inspired by work done in the 1970s by Mr. Hicks's father, the late decorator David Hicks.

The Hicksonian tile, above right, is a pattern of interlocking H's that was the decorator's logo. "He used them for a sheet and towel collection for a U.S. company," Mr. Hicks said. "As a child, I slept in sheets with that design."

Ashley Hicks used the tile in the bathroom of his country house, right, and in the dining room.

"In an English house, they come as quite a surprise," he said. But "because in cement tiles the colors are mixed by hand, you get a subtle variation, which is so lovely. They look slightly vintage as they wear down."

Hicksonian and the other patterns (Britwell, above left, and Bertie, center) are $19.50 a square foot. Information: pophamdesign.com or ashleyhicks.com.
